THE NEW CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE THESIS

The thesis is an in-depth study of administrative judgment execution. The research results will be significantly complementary to the current theory and practice in the administrative judgment enforcement activities in Vietnam. Accordingly, the findings of the dissertation will provide a scientifically theoretical basis for the execution of administrative judgments, law improvement as well as the organization of law implementation of administrative judgment enforcement in particular and the Law on Administrative Procedures in general in order to promote the effectiveness of administrative judgment enforcement activities in Vietnam. The outstanding new contributions are shown in the following contents:

(1) The thesis establishes fundamental and vital theoretical issues about the execution of administrative judgments. The clarification of these theoretical issues will be the foundation to approach for law provisions on the enforcement of administrative judgments, and the orientation towards suggesting law improvement on the enforcement of administrative judgments and administrative proceedings law.

(2) The thesis analyzes and evaluates the current law provisions on administrative judgment enforcement and administrative judgment execution practice in Vietnam, from which their problems and shortcomings are presented. Furthermore, the thesis also finds out the causes of these limitations.

(3) The thesis makes suggestions on amending and supplementing legal provisions and solutions to enhance the efficiency of law implementation on administrative judgment enforcement. These are the new recommendations based on scientific bases and arguments, consistent with the Communist Party's guidelines and policies on judicial reform. They contribute to the effectiveness enhancement of administrative judgment enforcement in Vietnam, protecting legitimate rights and interests for individuals, agencies and organizations in the society.
